Abstract—Using the Journal of Management Education as a representative source of management education research, this article examines the influence of journal articles published in the field of management education on the development of management education programs. The authors suggest that journal articles influence the development of management education programs in two ways: (a) by providing information about the current state of the field and (b) by providing information about the future of the field. The authors also suggest that journal articles influence the development of management education programs in three ways: (a) by providing information about the current state of the field, (b) by providing information about the future of the field, and (c) by providing information about the current state of the field and the future of the field. The authors conclude that journal articles have a significant influence on the development of management education programs.
