

Weber IDF Carb Rebuild

After years of service, and even more years of sitting idle, our expensive high-performance carburetors can become plugged with gunk and corrosion — here's how to bring them back to life

BY BRUCE SIMURDA

When we first installed our high performance carburetors, they looked beautiful. Shiny aluminum bodies atop equally beautiful manifolds. They barked when we opened the throttle, and made us feel like we added 100 horsepower when we blasted down the road or up the dune. But time has a way of taking a toll on all automotive parts, and before long the signs of age becomes apparent. But it's not necessarily extended use that gums-up a carb to the point where it needs to be "re-built," it's the long periods of sitting between uses that cause problems. Left sitting idle for months, or years, can cause condensation to form in the fuel system — especially with today's fuel — as ethanol increases water formation — and can corrode plastic and rubber inside the carburetor. This situation is especially problematic for off-road cars where the engine is exposed, or if the vehicle is stored outdoors.

Luckily, most carburetors are easy to rebuild, as long as you have a good kit. For this rebuild, we're using a Weber IDF rebuild kit (#703) from Radke Services that fits the 40, 44 and 48 Weber carbs, as well as the similar Emipi HPMX models. The nice thing about this kit is that it includes a new float, needle/seat with Viton tip, early and late accelerator pump diaphragms and springs, idle richness screws, all gaskets, o-rings, seals and even two fuel filters. About the only other things you'll need for the rebuild, besides a few hand tools, is a gallon of carburetor & parts cleaner (we used Chem-Dip from Berryman), and access to a compressor to blow-out the passages and jets.

TOP, before (left) and after. While it is cleaner on the outside, it's the big improvements on the inside that really matter. ABOVE, we used this rebuild kit from Radke Services, which includes critical components such as needle valve, float, accelerator pump diaphragm, and idle richness screws. LEFT, if your carb has been sitting outside, add a few drops of Liquid Wrench to threaded areas to help make them easier to remove.
