

A narrative approach to job search

by Pierre Nassif

Pierre Nassif is a career coach in Paris (France). Graduated from Ecole Polytechnique in Paris, he was previously an engineer in IT and Telecommunications, where he occupied various technical management positions. He had his initial training as a professional coach in 2008 and then was trained as a Narrative Practitioner by Pierre Blanc-Sahnoun in the Fabrique Narrative of Bordeaux (France). He contributed to the translation in French of "Down under and up Over" by David Epstein.

Introduction

I have recently published a book in French, the title of which translates in English: "search for a new job differently. An application of the narrative approach"<sup>1</sup>. When I became a coach, I was heading into my sixties and I specialised in the area of job search. At that time, I felt that I needed more than my basic coaching training and I went to a course on "Narrative approach", which was in France a practice devoted to coaching – actually a form of counselling dedicated to professional life problems.

I realised that narrative coaching was an innovation in the field of the narrative ideas which were themselves an innovation in the field of therapy. Moreover, the coaching activity itself was new, as it was introduced in France around 1995. That was not an obstacle in my eyes. In my previous engineering career, I was constantly in the area of innovation, the latest episode of the adventure having been the mobile phone, for which I held technical responsibilities at the very beginning of its launch.

This part of my story was fascinating because of all the innovations in which I was taking part. At the same time, it was rather complex because of personal difficulties which translated in professional instability: I constantly changed job. This probably explains why as a coach, the job search became my specialty.

My narrative training brought me more than a knowledge I could use and a helpful practice. It was a changing life experience. Instead of the usual messages of cautiousness a teacher usually gives to his students, the message of Pierre was to be confident on our abilities and to create and develop new ideas and practices.
