The Pedagogical (Re)Turn in Contemporary Art/
El Retorno Pedagógica en el Arte Contemporáneo

They must be trying to find something.

Thai farmers responding to Millet's The Gleaners, from Araya Rasdjarmrearnsook, The Two Planets series (2008)

In her series Two Planets (2008) the artist Araya Rasdjarmrearnsook presented small groups of Thai villagers with images from the history of European modernist painting (Millet's The Gleaners, Van Gogh's The Midday Sleep, etc.) and recorded their responses. Their reactions are both speculative and pragmatic, drawing on their own experiences of labor and perceived commonalities with the subjects of the paintings. This unusual encounter complicates the circuit of identification typical in modern art, in which the bourgeois artist claims to speak from a position of empathy with a class Other (peasant, proletarian, revolutionary), evoking their lived experience in images intended to shock, shame or discomfit other members of the bourgeoisie. In some cases (Millet or Van Gogh) this class ventriloquism takes the form of an aesthetic tribute in which the poor are portrayed as exemplars of a nobility, fortitude or innocence that is singularly lacking among the bourgeoisie. And in others their exhausted or coerced bodies are presented as a calculated affront, intended to force viewers into awareness of their own class privilege, in a tradition that extends from Courbet to Santiago Sierra.

Creativity Exercises Dora Hegyi,Zsuzsa Laszlo,Franciska Zolyom,2021-02-02 A collection of texts historical and contemporary on radical pedagogy in the arts How do people learn what do they know and how does it influence their personality their behavior and their position in society These questions were the focus of the research project and exhibition series entitled Creativity Exercises between 2014 and 2016 which displayed historical and contemporary art projects experimenting with alternative forms of learning spanning three exhibition stations Galerie fu r Zeitgen ssische Kunst Leipzig tranzit hu in Budapest and the Museum of Modern Art in Warsaw The book contextualizes the Creativity Exercises an amateur art course led by neo avant garde artists Mikl s Erd ly and D ra Maurer in Budapest from 1975 to 1977 within the postwar intellectual networks that connected artists architects educators sociologists and other socially engaged professionals fostering the exchange of ideas and concepts and making connections between different fields of knowledge The first part of the publication consists of historical texts translated into English for the first time including the exercise descriptions that functioned as the curriculum for the Creativity Exercises studies written on the methods employed in the Creativity Exercises course and parallel models for progressive pedagogies and art education In the second part of the book newly commissioned essays offer historical and transnational context for the case study of the Creativity Exercises course The impact that such creativity exercises had on aesthetic educational and institutional concepts and the impulses for participation co creation knowledge production and exchange that they continue to give even beyond the realm of art are the central themes of the book Contributors L szl Beke Ildik Enyedi Mikl s Erd ly D ra Maurer Ferenc M rei and Tam s St Auby va Forg cs Janna Graham D ra Hegyi S ndor Hornyik Zsolt K Horv th Emese Ku rti Zsuzsa L szl Marion von Osten Axel Wieder

Issues in Art and Design Teaching Nicholas Addison,Lesley Burgess,2003 Arguing for a critical approach to art and design curriculum this volume draws together a range of ethical and pedagogical issues for trainee and newly qualified teachers of art and design in both primary and secondary schools Freakish Student Amy Bowman-McElhone,2020 Contemporary U S artist Mike Kelley s body of work can be read as an assessment of the institutions of the university and late twentieth century contemporary art through the valences of time geography pedagogy and systems of exchange that oscillate between identifications of institutional complicities and anxieties of institutional affiliations With his artworks texts and exhibitions Kelley entwines the viewer in an endless web of institutional affiliations for which there is no terminus or other position This dissertation argues that Kelley s broader project can be read in terms of pedagogical aesthetics that represents a form of pedagogical Institutional Critique that is not museum based but is rooted firmly in the artist s educational engagements as both a student and as a teacher at the California Institute of the Arts CalArts Minneapolis College of Art and Design and ArtCenter College of Design in Pasadena Much of Kelley s practice is generated from his attempts to reconcile what he describes as the anti material and idealistic reductivism of his Conceptual Arts education with his own materialist maximalism Kelley centers the legibility of his artworks within institutions of pedagogy such as the home the school and the museum all of which are positioned as interchangeable sites webbed with institutional affiliations and anxieties imaged through fictive pedagogic traumas As such this dissertation presents a sustained study of Kelley s interrogations of artistic pedagogy cultural formations and his material maximalisms as he wrestled with art s failure to be a productive social force by bringing into tension charged imagery that transgresses the high art low art dialectic as defined in the late twentieth century This study presents a sustained historical analysis that weaves a number of narrative threads examining the school as a critical site in Kelley s work and how his deployment of humor filmic and narrative genres concepts of play site specificity nostalgia and amateurism collate with architectures of memory camera based methodologies of critique and explorations of the museum as a pedagogical space The origins and points of artistic influence are critical subjects in Kelley s work Overlooked by critics curators and art historians the school as a site of institutional critique is overshadowed in art historical discourses because it is not public facing yet universities and Master of Fine Arts degree programs became critical shapers of the geographies of contemporary art Howard Singerman was the first to assert that Kelley s project was centered on the university however the intention of this dissertation is to greatly expand upon Singerman s claims and narrow scope by proposing that the multiplicities and varied threads avenues and evocations in Kelley s work are generated from his constant mining of sites and architectures of pedagogy the home the school and the museum all of which function as the refuges and institutions of the late twentieth and twenty first century artist Both Singerman s and Mark McGurl s accounts of the emergence of MFA degrees in the fields of art and creative writing infer that the primary mode of influence for academic programs are the ways in which they recreate themselves through the students This cloning dynamic was an operation that Kelley repeatedly engaged with and critiqued in his work and is frequently left out of accounts of his practice a gap that this dissertation vitally fills The resulting educational turn fomented a range of pedagogical engagements and educational aesthetic gestures by contemporary artists yet there is a dearth of analysis on the topic of pedagogically informed Institutional Critique and a significant gap in the scholarship in attending to such critical practices that reside outside of museum centered discourses This is particularly salient for art located within the context of educational institutions which includes Kelley s practice and is a vital lens through which to understand the contours of contemporary art Since his death in 2012 Kelley has had a remarkable influence on a generation of artists including his own students The trace of his materialist maximalism and use of local pop and low cultural images and objects and his insistence that those materials contain meaning worth investigating as a methodology of institutional and social critique is in the DNA of twenty first century contemporary art to the point of ubiquity Kelley s influence can be seen in a range of contemporary global practitioners and artists like Mika Rottenberg Xavier Cha and Carlos Rolon Located within Kelley s practice are the attendant dynamics of memory and affect that shape those spaces and sites along with frequent representations and references to the geographical nodes of Los Angeles California and Detroit Michigan both of which take on a mythical status in the artist s practice This dissertation mines the work of Kelley and his interest in the unhistoric acts and entanglements of education influence and institutionality that shape the experiences of the late twentieth and twenty first century artist and the geographies of contemporary art through the mesmerisms of Kelley s aesthetic material and narrative phantasms This project seeks to recalibrate the field of inquiry towards the discourses practices and histories of a pedagogic Institutional Critique an overlooked mode generally by identifying Kelley s work as being distinct within it
