Intermediaries Frank Rose, 2012-12-06 The Internet provides an infrastructure that makes the steadily increasing amount of information accessible efficiently quickly and inexpensively Closely connected with this opportunity is the danger that the available information will over charge the individual information seeker's capability to process the information and to judge its quality In this situation information intermediaries can take upon the role of an expert and a guarantor of quality similar to intermediaries in markets for physical goods or finances Thus information intermediaries can be a trustworthy information processing third party mediating between information seekers and information sources The current technological development has created information technologies that are capable to efficiently process large amounts of information However the provision of intermediation services necessitates a thorough examination of the basic principles underlying the economics of information intermediaries as well as a sound foundation on information technologies The present work by Frank Rose addresses the fundamental question concerning the economics of information intermediaries by means of an abstract model The model focuses on services that concentrate on the search and mediation of information and identifies the essential influencing factors of the intermediary's environment The model is then employed to investigate the impact of environmental conditions on the information intermediary on the one hand and the optimal strategy of the information intermediary as a reaction to environmental conditions on the other hand

Pricing, Demand Analysis and Simulation Nadira Barkatullah, 1999-03 Recent changes in the New South Wales water utilities show a trend towards usage related pricing with the aim of providing efficient signals for consumption This thesis evaluates alternative pricing strategies for water against the criteria of efficiency and equity while maintaining the financial viability of the public utility First the water utility cost structure is examined by developing cost functions to estimate short and long run marginal costs using a quarterly time series data from 1970/71 to 1995/96 Second a residential water demand model is developed using a panel data set constructed for the analysis comprising 822 cross sectional units and 23 quarterly time periods from 1990/91 to 1995/96 The purposes of developing the demand model are to test the sensitivity of water demand to changes in the tariff structure and to use it to simulate the impact of alternative pricing strategies Third the simulation model is developed to analyse various pricing reforms using both the cost and demand model results where the individual welfare and aggregate efficiency gains are determined under each pricing policy In addition to this the distributional effects of various tariff structures are examined The empirical results of the cost structure estimates are comparable with previous studies The demand estimation indicates that consumers respond to price therefore price can be considered as a tool in the implementation of demand management strategies However the magnitude of the price elasticity suggests that substantial increases in price would be required to influence demand Finally the simulation results show that in the case of movement from the actual tariff structure to a two part tariff policy where the usage charge is equal to the short run marginal cost leads to highest efficiency gains

Operationalizing Dynamic Pricing Models Steffen Christ,2011-04-02 Steffen Christ shows how theoretic optimization models can be operationalized by employing self learning strategies to construct relevant input variables such as latent demand and customer price sensitivity
