OB

Normal First Trimester Embryology and Anatomy (weeks 1-13)

Fertilization occurs usually in ampulla, within 24 hours of ovulation (day 14 in a 28 day cycle). Once conception occurs, fertilized egg is termed zygote. The zygote will undergo rapid cell division in the next couple days. At 3-4 days after fertilization, morula when it is a cluster of cells. By day 5, 1st time cell differentiation takes place and it is now a blastocyst.

BLASTOCYST:

Trophoblast: outer ring of trophoblastic cells begin to produce hCG. The hCG maintains the Corpus Luteum so that it will not regress and will keep sending progesterone to endo. Endo prepares for implantation and becomes decidualized (AKA decidual reaction). This outer layer will eventually become chorion and placenta.

Embryoblast: inner cell mass that will develop into embryo, amnion, cord, and yolk sacs.

Implantation occurs 7-9 days after fertilization. Finger-like projections of the trophoblast called chorionic villi form links into decidualized endometrium. By day 28 from LMP, completed implantation. By this week, the primary yolk sac is already regressing and is replaced by secondary yolk sac. We never see the primary YS, only the secondary. hCG levels continue to double every 48 hours until 9 weeks

4 weeks: Before a gestational sac is seen, the endo will take on a multi-layered appearance due to the increase in progesterone. Earliest visible sign of pregnancy is a decidualized endo, may also have tiny anechoic sac as well
