

How to write an Essay

In France, debates about how to deal with disability led to the adoption of different strategies over time. While people with temporary difficulties were able to access public welfare, the most common response to vision loss, was to group them together in institutions (Tombs, 1996). At first, a school for the blind and deaf was created, and although the partnership was motivated more by financial considerations than by the well-being of the residents, the institute helped people develop skills valuable to society (Weygand & Cohen, 2009). Eventually, deaf institutions were separated from blind institutions, and the focus shifted toward as was the case for the Royal Institute for Blind Youth, which Louis Braille attended (Jiménez et al., 2009). The growing acknowledgement of the unique challenges of different disabilities led to more targeted education strategies, fostering an environment where the benefits of a specifically blind education could be more widely recognized.

Several different systems of tactile reading can be seen as forerunners to Braille. Although Braille was the first system developed, these systems were all developed based on the sight letters, a method created by the school's founder, Valentin Haüy (Jiménez et al., 2009).

Reading this way proved to be a rather arduous task, as the letters were difficult to distinguish by touch. The embossed letter method was based on the reading system of sighted people,
