Chapter 15

→ STOCKHOLDERS EQUITY (A.K.A. RESIDUAL INTEREST OF A CORPORATION)

Corporate Capital

Three primary forms of business organization

1. Proprietorship (including LLCs)
2. Partnership (including LLPs)
3. Corporation (public or private)

Special Characteristics of Corporations

- They are subject to corporate state law from they are incorporated in
- Use capital stock or share system
- Can possess a variety of ownership interests (i.e. common, preferred stock)

State Corporate Law

- Corporation must submit articles of incorporation (charter) to state in which incorporation is desired
 - o Incorporated in one state, doesn't have to be the state the headquarters are in
- Most corporations incorporate in Delaware
 - o Its state laws favor the corporate form of business organization

Capital Stock of Share System

→ Each corporation has a large number of units or shares of stock authorized by its charter

- Corporations may have more than one type/class of stock (common, preferred)
- Within each stock class, each share equals exactly to every other share
- Number of shares possessed determines the owner's interest
 - o If you own 250 of 1000 shares you own 25% of company
- The share system easily allows transfer of ownership interest from one investor to another at any time, at any price, without obtaining consent

→ each share of stock has certain rights and privileges, which can only be restricted by a Corporation via a special contract:

1. To share proportionately in profits and losses
 - a. You own 25% of the corporation's ownership interest, you stand to lose 25%
2. To share proportionately in management (the right to vote for directors)
3. To share proportionately in assets upon liquidation
4. To share proportionately in any new issues of stock of the same class—called preemptive right
 - a. If you own 25% before new stock is issued, you have the right to stay at 25% after the issuance of new stock.

Variety of Ownership Interests

Common Stock:

- Represents basic corporate ownership or residual interest
 - o Bears the ultimate risk of loss if Corporations do not do well
 - o Dividends are not guaranteed
 - o Assets upon dissolution are not guaranteed
 - o Profit the most if Corporation is successful
 - o Generally control management through board of directors' elections

Preferred Stock

- Created by contract—with rights and privileges that are different from common stock
- Usually issued with par value and a percentage that represents what preferred stock is entitled to when dividends are paid out
 - o 10% preferred stock with $200 par is entitled to an annual dividend of $20 per share

Unattractive Rights and Privileges

- No voting –cannot vote like common stockholders do

Attractive Rights and Privileges

1. Preference to dividends
 - a. If a dividend is declared by a corporation, preferred stockholders must get paid the stated dividend rate BEFORE paying dividends on common stock
 - b. Special features regarding dividend payments
 - i. Cumulative: if a corporation fails to pay a dividend in any year, the dividend amount will accumulate every year until paid (called "dividends in arrears")
 - ii. Non-Cumulative: above feature does not exist. Dividends not declared in a given year are lost forever
