

Unit 6 Notes: Reproduction at the Cellular Level

6.1 The Genome

Genomic DNA

Genome: cell's complete complement of DNA

In prokaryotes the genome is composed of a single double stranded DNA molecule in the form of a loop or circle – the region of the cell containing genetic material is the nucleoid

In eukaryotes the genome is composed of several double stranded, linear DNA molecules bound with proteins to form complexes called chromosomes – each species of eukaryote has a certain number of chromosomes in the nuclei of its cells – the human body cells (aka somatic cells) have 46 chromosomes

Diploid: when somatic cells contain two matched sets of chromosomes

The letter n is used to represent a single set of chromosomes; therefore a diploid organism is designated $2n$

Gametes: human cells that contain one set of 23 chromosomes – these are also known as sex cells; egg and sperm cells are designated n – aka haploid

Homologous chromosomes: the matched pairs of chromosomes in a diploid organism – these chromosomes are the same length and have specific nucleotide segments called genes in the same location, aka locus

Genes: the fictional units of chromosomes – determine specific characteristics by coding for specific proteins

Each copy of the homologous pair of chromosomes originates from a different parents – the copies of each of the genes themselves may not be identical – the variation of individuals within a species is caused by the specific combination of the genes inherited from both parents

There are 3 possible gene sequences on the human chromosome that code for blood type: sequence A, sequence B, sequence O – and because all diploid human cells have two copies of the chromosome that determines blood type, the blood type is determined by two versions of the marker gene that is inherited – it is possible to have 2 copies of the same gene sequence, one on each homologous chromosome (ex: AA, BB, OO) or two different sequences (ex: AB)
