THE POWER OF CRITICAL THINKING

In teaching a course in critical thinking, instructors initially face two large problems: students don't know what critical thinking is (or are mistaken about what it is), and they don't know why it matters. The objectives of this initial chapter, then, are (1) to provide students with a clear and readable preface to critical thinking fundamentals and (2) to explain how critical thinking intersects with their lives and why this intersection deserves their attention. Thus, this chapter is the gateway to the rest of the book. Without thoroughly understanding the basic ideas in this chapter, students will probably find most of the other chapters more difficult than they need to be.

To meet the first objective, the chapter is presented to students who are assumed to have no understanding of what of critical thinking is. It begins with a working definition of critical thinking and explains and illustrates the following basic concepts: statement, argument, premise, conclusion, inference, and indicator words. There is also ample material on distinguishing arguments from non-arguments and picking arguments out of extended passages. The chapter is deliberately short—to avoid overwhelming students—and deliberately concise and straightforward (without being simplistic)—to ensure complete understanding. The chapter, nevertheless, has many opportunities for students to practise their new skills through exercises and writing assignments. Some instructors are not afraid to spend two, three, or more weeks on such fundamentals. With this chapter under their belts, students should be able to jump off to the more demanding chapters—chapter 3, for instance, or perhaps even chapters 6 and 7 on deductive reasoning, probably the most daunting chapters for first-time students.

To meet the second objective, chapter 1 explains the importance of critical thinking primarily by zeroing in on a recurrent theme: that the quality of our lives is largely defined by the quality of our thinking—and the quality of our thinking can be improved through the use of critical thinking. The question put to students then is not whether they sometimes use critical thinking (we all do), but how well they use it.

This line of reasoning, of course, may not get very far with students if they harbour prejudices against the very idea of critical thinking. They may, for example, think that critical thinking makes people excessively critical or cynical, emotionally cold, and creatively constrained. Therefore, these notions are examined and dispatched in short order. But this section of the chapter can make for a fun classroom discussion.

The first writing tutorial (module) appears at the end of this chapter. The modules are progressive, and so this one starts at square one—with an introduction to the purpose and structure of argumentative essays and a step-by-step procedure for writing them. Module 1 helps students put arguments in essay form, giving them another way to practise analyzing and presenting arguments.

One useful approach to argument analysis is to have students write out an argument in short essay form—perhaps having them imagine that they are writing a blog entry—and then have them exchange papers and identify the premises and conclusions. At this point, it is reasonable to have the students decide whether they accept the conclusions and explain why or why not.

Rethinking Society in the 21st Century, Fourth Edition Kate Bezanson, Michelle Webber, 2016-09-01 Rethinking Society in the 21st Century is a critical collection of readings that provides students with a foundational knowledge base in sociology. The fourth edition has been thoroughly updated to include significant Canadian content with a greater focus on indigeneity, gender and sexuality, and a new section dedicated to social movements, social change, and emerging fields. This anthology introduces students to the fundamental elements of sociology with a balance of classical theory (Marx, Weber, Durkheim, Mills) and more contemporary approaches found in the works of Michel Foucault and Dorothy Smith. Building on this theoretical grounding, the text outlines core concepts in sociology as well as major social institutions such as families, the economy, and labour, education, health care, and media. Covering a wide breadth of topics, including chapters on animals, the environment, crime, trans issues, class, ethnicity, and race, this new edition explores critical debates in Canadian society with an emphasis on intersectional approaches to social inequalities. This volume is rich with pedagogical features that promote critical understanding, including detailed introductions that speak to the contextual history of the source material and discussion questions for each section. Uniquely designed for introductory courses, Rethinking Society in the 21st Century is the ideal reader for Canadian students of sociology.
