The Journal is a site of hybridity. Africa is a source of images in the 1930s, a metaphor, of sorts, for modernism. Promotions and advertisements in the Journal (Fig. 20) speak against a facile South-South connection made for that modernism in health programs, particularly one, medical and health education, which African doctors and nurses often mistakenly equate to medicine during the 1930s. In fact, it was often the opposite that occurred. Many of the advertisements would state that "enough" medicine is in the hands of South Africa and that "theoretical" or "bookish" medicine of Europe is better. (Fig. 20) Some of the advertisements, particularly that in Ireland (Fig. 20), are "crossed" geographically with space in writing to function. Thus, the advertising of the 1930s is a kind of text that has to be "translated" from a space of advertisement to a space of writing and thought.

But the latest version of the program itself came with a small number of bugs, and it is possible that another version of the library is also producing incorrect output. Please let us know if you find any bugs.
