

4. Sharing is Caring

Once there was a miser named Harry. He never shared anything with anyone. One day, when he was walking through a street, he saw a saint. When the saint was offered food, he gave it to the birds and the animals and then distributed the rest among the people sitting with him.

At last, there was nothing left for him. Harry got impatient and went to the saint and asked him, "You distributed whatever you had now there is nothing left for you?" The saint replied that I got a treasure of gratitude and joy from all the living beings around and that was the best return I could get for being in this universe. Harry understood the value of sharing and decided to share whatever he had with others.

Moral: Helping others and sharing with others is the ultimate happiness.

5. Self-sufficiency Solves Everything

There lived a farmer with his two daughters Sally and Mary. Sally was very hardworking whereas Mary was very lazy. She did not do any work at home. Whenever the farmer and his wife asked Mary to help Sally, she never listened to them.

Once it so happened that Mary's parents and sister had to go to a nearby village for some work. Mary was left all alone at home. Since she had never done any work, she did not know how to cook. Feeling hungry, when she tried to cook rice the vessel of hot water fell a bit on her and on the floor. Mary realised the importance of learning the basic household chores. By the time her parents and sister returned she had changed and become a responsible person.

Moral: Never be lazy and become self-sufficient.
