

B4 Processes of Life - Revision Tickler

B4.1 How do chemical reactions take place in living things?	000
b4.1.1. the basic processes of life carried out by all living things depend on chemical reactions in cells that require energy released by respiration. b4.1.2. photosynthesis in makes food molecules and energy available to living organisms through food chains. b4.1.3. describe photosynthesis as a series of chemical reactions that use energy from sunlight to build large food molecules in plant cells and some microorganisms (eg phytoplankton). b4.1.4. describe respiration as a series of chemical reactions that release energy by breaking down large food molecules in all living cells.
b4.1.5. recall that enzymes are proteins that speed up chemical reactions. b4.1.6. recall that cells make enzymes according to the instructions carried in genes. b4.1.7. understand that molecules have to be the correct shape to fit into the active site of the enzyme (the lock and key model).
b4.1.8. understand that enzymes need a specific constant temperature to work at their optimum, and that they permanently stop working (denature) if the temperature is too high. b4.1.9. explain that enzyme activity at different temperatures is a balance between: - increased rates of reaction as temperature increases - changes to the active site at higher temperatures, including denaturing - candidates are not expected to explain why rates of reaction increase with temperature.
b4.1.10. recall that an enzyme works at its optimum at a specific pH b4.1.11. explain the effect of pH on enzyme activity in terms of changes to the shape of the active site.
B4.2 How do plants make food?	000 b4.2.1. recall the names of the reactants and products of photosynthesis, and use the word equation: - light energy - carbon dioxide + water → glucose + oxygen.
b4.2.2. recall the formulae of the reactants and products of photosynthesis, and use the symbol equation: - light energy $6\text{CO}_2 + 6\text{H}_2\text{O} \rightarrow \text{C}_6\text{H}_{12}\text{O}_6 + 6\text{O}_2$ b4.2.3. recall the main stages of photosynthesis: - light energy absorbed by the green chemical chlorophyll - energy used to bring about the reaction between carbon dioxide and water to produce glucose (a sugar) - oxygen produced as a waste product.
b4.2.4. recall that glucose may be: - converted into chemicals needed for growth of plant cells, for example cellulose, protein and chlorophyll - converted into starch for storage - used in respiration to release energy.
b4.2.14. understand that the rate of photosynthesis may be limited by: - temperature - carbon dioxide - light intensity. b4.2.15. interpret data on factors limiting the rate of photosynthesis.
b4.2.5. recall the structure of a typical plant cell, limited to chloroplasts, cell membrane, nucleus, cytoplasm, mitochondria, vacuole and cell wall. b4.2.6. understand the functions of the structures in a typical plant cell that have a role in photosynthesis, including: - chloroplasts contain chlorophyll and the enzymes for the reactions in photosynthesis - cell membrane allows gases and water to pass in and out of the cell freely while presenting a barrier to other chemicals. - nucleus contains dna which carries the genetic code for making enzymes and other proteins used in the chemical reactions of photosynthesis - cytoplasm where the enzymes and other proteins are made.
b4.2.8. understand that diffusion is the passive overall movement of molecules from a region of their higher concentration to a region of their lower concentration. b4.2.9. recall that the movement of oxygen and carbon dioxide in and out of leaves during photosynthesis occurs by diffusion. b4.2.12. understand that active transport is the overall movement of chemicals across a cell membrane requiring energy from respiration. b4.2.13. recall that active transport is used in the absorption of nitrates by plant roots. b4.2.7. recall that minerals taken up by plant roots are used to make some chemicals needed by cells, including nitrogen from nitrates to make proteins.
