beginning for survival of the human species The Corner of the Living Miguel La Serna, 2012-03-12 Peru's indigenous peoples played a key role in the tortured tale of Shining Path guerrillas from the 1960s through the first decade of the twenty-first century. The villagers of Chuschi and Huaychao high in the mountains of the department of Ayacucho have an iconic place in this violent history. Emphasizing the years leading up to the peak period of violence from 1980 to 2000 when 69,000 people lost their lives, Miguel La Serna asks why some Andean peasants chose to embrace Shining Path ideology and others did not. Drawing on archival materials and ethnographic field work, La Serna argues that historically rooted and locally specific power relations, social conflicts, and cultural understandings shaped the responses of indigenous peasants to the insurgency. In Chuschi, the guerrillas found indigenous support for the movement and dreamed of sparking a worldwide Maoist revolution. In Huaychao, by contrast, villagers rose up against Shining Path forces, precipitating more violence and feeding an international uproar that took on political significance for Peru during the Cold War. The Corner of the Living illuminates both the stark realities of life for the rural poor everywhere and why they may or may not choose to mobilize around a revolutionary cause.

United States Aid Operations in Peru United States. Congress. House. Committee on Government Operations, 1961 Peruvian Dream Lani Imhof, 2015 In January 2001, Lani Imhof and Michael Smith left their jobs, rented out their house, sold their car, and headed off on a ten-month odyssey in Latin America. As they travelled through the poorer countries of Bolivia and Peru, they became increasingly uncomfortable with the huge differences between their comparative wealth and the poverty they witnessed in Latin America. Six months into their journey, they met a bright and bubbly Quechuan teenager at a village in the highlands of Peru, and she introduced them to her family. When Lani and Michael first met the Carbajal Moreira family, they had never received mail, didn't have a letterbox, and had never heard of email. They were struggling to survive and put food on the table. The six intelligent children had no hope of receiving a higher education. Poor as they were, their generosity and affection touched Lani and Michael's hearts. After the travellers returned to Australia, they decided to support the Carbajal Moreiras. For the long term, they became godparents to the second-eldest daughter and were accepted into the family. What began as a financial commitment blossomed into a life-long bond between the two families, which was strengthened by the next two visits they made to Peru to live with the Carbajal Moreiras. This is the story of the growing connection between two families from vastly different backgrounds: a middle-class couple from Australia and a poor indigenous family from Peru. It illuminates the differences and the similarities between the lives, experiences, and aspirations of the two families and portrays how the Australian couple's support has resulted in educational and employment opportunities for the children, helping them to break out of the cycle of poverty.
