This chapter introduces students to the important concepts of demand and supply. The chapter uses examples to illustrate how changes in non-price factors impact demand, supply, and the resulting market equilibrium. Demand is the relationship between price and the quantity demanded of a good by consumers in a given period of time, all other factors held constant. Supply is the relationship between price and the quantity supplied of a good by producers in a given period of time, all other factors held constant. The discussion uses graphical and algebraic methods. The chapter begins with a case of analysis (Demand and Supply in The Copper Industry) which demonstrates how demand and supply factors influenced the copper supply and demand and how changes in these functions impact the market price of copper.
