Communication with Extraterrestrial Intelligence (CETI) Douglas A. Vakoch, 2011-04-01 In April 2010 fifty years to the month after the first experiment in the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence SETI scholars from a range of disciplines including astronomy mathematics anthropology history and cognitive science gathered at NASA's biennial Astrobiology Science Conference AbSciCon for a series of sessions on the search for intelligent life This book highlights the most recent developments in SETI discussed at that conference emphasizing the ways that SETI has grown since its inception The volume covers three broad themes First leading researchers examine the latest developments in observational SETI programs as well as innovative proposals for new search strategies and novel approaches to signal processing Second both proponents and opponents of Active SETI debate whether humankind should be transmitting intentional signals to other possible civilizations rather than only listening Third constructive proposals for interstellar messages are juxtaposed with critiques that ask whether any meaningful exchange is possible with an independently evolved civilization given the constraints of contact at interstellar distances where a round trip exchange could take centuries or millennia As we reflect on a half century of SETI research we are reminded of the expansion of search programs made possible by technological and conceptual advances In this spirit of ongoing exploration the contributors to this book advocate a diverse range of approaches to make SETI increasingly more powerful and effective as we embark on the next half century of searching for intelligence beyond Earth

Clustering in the Universe S. Maurogordato, 1995 Toward an Understanding of the Progenitors of Gamma-Ray Bursts Joshua S. Bloom, 2002 The various possibilities for the origin progenitors of gamma-ray bursts GRBs manifest in differing observable properties Through deep spectroscopic and high-resolution imaging observations of some GRB hosts I demonstrate that well-localized long-duration GRBs are connected with otherwise normal star-forming galaxies at moderate redshifts of order unity Using high-mass binary stellar population synthesis models I quantify the expected spatial extent around galaxies of coalescing neutron stars one of the leading contenders for GRB progenitors I then test this scenario by examining the offset distribution of GRBs about their apparent hosts making extensive use of ground-based optical data from Keck and Palomar and space-based imaging from the Hubble Space Telescope The offset distribution appears to be inconsistent with the coalescing neutron star binary hypothesis and similarly black-hole neutron star coalescences instead the distribution is statistically consistent with a population of progenitors that closely traces the ultraviolet light of galaxies This is naturally explained by bursts which originate from the collapse of massive stars collapsars This claim is further supported by the unambiguous detections of intermediate-time approximately three-weeks after the bursts emission bumps which appear substantially more red than the afterglows themselves I claim that these bumps could originate from supernovae that occur at approximately the same time as the associated GRB if true GRB 980326 and GRB 011121 provide strong observational evidence connecting cosmological GRBs to high-redshift supernovae and implicate massive stars as the progenitors of at least some long-duration GRBs
