

Louré (Fr.); Portato (It.)

This essentially legato bowing is accomplished by slightly separating the notes while the bow is being drawn across the string. It can produce a very expressive effect and is used often in accompaniments. This bowing is indicated by dashes under or over each of the noteheads, with slurs to designate the bow changes. We have added bowings in Example 2-30 to show how the passage is to be played. Louré is easily played with both up- and down-bows.

EXAMPLE 2-30. Handel, Messiah, "Comfort Ye," mm. 1-4 (tenor part not recorded on CD)

Staccato

The word staccato is derived from the Italian word staccare, meaning to detach or separate. For bowed string instruments, it is best to use the term staccato to describe an on-the-string effect only. Staccato is indicated by placing a dot over or under the notehead and is most effectively performed at moderate to slow tempos for reasons that will be clarified below. Staccato passages can be played loud or soft, and may be performed in one of two ways. Notice the difference in the notation of these two modes of performance.

Separate Bow Staccato

This technique is effected by playing short, separate bow strokes (Examples 2-31 and 2-36).
