✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

This paper examines the leading distracters that are encountered while driving. Specifically, it presents the issue of drunk driving and texting while driving to investigate which of the two distracters causes more accidents on the roads. The study aims to explore the consequences of driving while drunk vis-à-vis texting while driving.

Distracted Driving

Distracted driving is a major cause of accidents on the international front, with countries around the world having legislation that is aimed at curbing these occurrences (Galeano par. 1; Regan, Lee, and Young 3). Bennett confirms how distracted driving results in significant loss of life on the roads. Driving requires one to be attentive to the road and the conditions around him or her. Some of the recognized forms of distracted driving include texting while driving and driving while drunk.

Bennett (1) states that these two forms of distraction are confirmed to be causes of accidents on the road. Improvements in telecommunication and information technology have led to more mobile device users, with this situation being associated with the rise in accidents that are related to drivers who text while behind the wheel. These improvements have also ensured that texting while driving features as a leading cause of accidents associated with distracted driving. This cause has replaced driving while drunk in the top five causes of accidents ("Top 10 Causes of Car Accidents" par. 4). While both forms of distracted driving can be fatal (Bennett 3), most researchers confirm that texting while driving is increasingly becoming common (Gonzales 1).

Drunk Driving

Drunk driving is one of the forms of distracted driving. It has traditionally been associated with the deaths of thousands of drivers and pedestrians (Lerner 10). Lerner (12) states that many victims of accidents that are associated with drunk driving have also ended up with disabilities. Drivers have often engaged in driving after having a

Writing the Social Text Richard Brown, 2017-07-05. During the past decade it has become commonplace to interpret social and cultural reality the very groundwork of the social sciences as linguistic constructions. Not only is society viewed as a text but scientific texts themselves are seen as rhetorical constructions. This collection of scholarly essays begins with an overview of this emerging field and covers the specific stylistic practices by which social scientists create objective or true representations of society. The volume closes with a consideration of the more telling challenges to the rhetorics of the social sciences and how these might be encompassed or overcome.

Meaning, Context and Methodology Sarah-Jane Conrad,Klaus Petrus,2017-10-23 What methodological impact does Contextualism have on the philosophy of language This collection sets out to provide some answers The authors in this volume question three ultimately connected assumptions of the philosophy of language The first assumption relates to the predominant status of referential semantics and its power to explain truth conditional meaning This assumption has come under attack by the context thesis and a number of papers pursue the question of whether this is justified The second assumption gives priority to assertive sentences when considering language use The context thesis changes our understanding of language use altogether possible implications from this methodological shift are addressed in this volume

According to the third assumption philosophical analysis amounts to nothing more than conceptual analysis The context thesis risks undermining this project Whether conceptual analysis can still be defended as a methodological tool is discussed in this volume     Highway Safety Literature ,1979
