The Triumph of the Cross Girolamo Savonarola, 1996-01-01 Savonarola was a speaker rather than a writer His was the eloquent ministry of the living word rather than the calm apostolate of the lifeless pen He was more at home when standing in the pulpit of the Duomo in Florence facing the panting throbbing crowd numbering thousands who with itching ears and thirsting souls drank in his every word as though the words were dewdrops from heaven than when sitting at the little table which is still preserved in his lowly cell at San Marco holding in his emaciated hand a nerveless passionless pen His great master intellect and his large sympathetic heart seemed to long to pour out their rich pent up treasures freely and without stint through the channel of his eloquent tongue whereas the hand that would perpetuate his thoughts by stamping them upon paper at times seemed palsied Out of the abundance of his heart his mouth preferred to speak Still he wrote sometimes it was generally however under moral compulsion being impelled to do so by circumstances which he could not control He was accused of error by those or to those at a distance his advice was sought by others who were far away defence or counsel had to be committed to paper For a time he might not sway the masses as he would by the irresistible magic of his burning words then we have the apostolate of the pen He retired to the seclusion of his monastic cell and wrote as his zeal prompted his message to his fellow men Many of his treatises short ones for the most part exist We have his five books we might call them chapters they are so brief on The Simplicity of the Christian Life a treatise on Humility an exposition of the Our Father and another of the Hail Mary commentaries on some of the Psalms an explanation of the Mass and of the ceremonies of the Holy Sacrifice certain rules for good Christian living composed when he was in prison and a number of other letters and booklets But perhaps the most notable as well as the most useful of his writings are the four little Books as he calls them which these words are to introduce to the English reading public and which he himself styles in the Prologue or Introduction to the First Book a defence of the glorious Triumph of the Cross over the profane and foolish babble of worldly wise Philosophers Of St Philip Neri the Apostle of Rome who was ever staunch in his loyalty to the memory of the one who for a time at least was the Apostle of his own native Florence it is said that this was one of his favourite books The Saint s biographer Cardinal Capececiattolo writes It is well known that Philip often read the writings of Savonarola especially The Triumph of the Cross and that he used them for the instruction of his spiritual children There are still preserved in the Vallicella among the books which belonged to St Philip and which were given by him to the Congregation five of Savonarola s works The history and object of The Triumph of The Cross which may be considered the most important of the works if we may so call them of the great Florentine Reformer is given by Echard the Continuator of Quetif in his Scriptores Ordinis Prædicatorum The English Reformation Francis Charles Massingberd, 1866 British Museum British Museum (London), 1883 The Tablet of Memory, shewing every memorable event in history, from the earliest period to the year 1792. ...
