The Joy of Science Richard A. Lockshin, 2007-11-05 Scientists have great passion What could be more exhilarating than to go to work every day feeling as if you were once again a nine year old called up to the stage to help the magician with his trick To be a researcher is to always be in the position of having the chance to see how the trick works No wonder that many researchers feel that each new day is the most exciting day to be a scientist It therefore is not surprising that scientists have such trouble communicating with non scientists It is difficult for the scientist to understand a life not focused on the desire to understand But the differences are not that Everyone wants to understand that is one of the factors that make us human The difference is more that scientists limit their definition of comprehension to specific rules of logic and evidence These rules apply and are used in everyday life but often with less rigor or restrictions on evidence of educational worlds dominated by intimidation and anxiety by ambivalence degradation and shame Based on six years of teaching and research in the South Bronx and in Southeast Amsterdam Toxic Schools is the first fully participatory ethnographic study of its kind and a searing examination of daily life in two radically different settings What these schools have in common however are not the predictable ideas about race and educational achievement but the tragically similar habituated stress responses of students forced to endure the experience of constant vulnerability From both sides of the Atlantic Ocean Pauley paints an intimate portrait of how students and teachers actually cope in real time with the chronic stress peer group dynamics and subtle power politics of urban educational spaces in the perpetual shadow of aggression
