Budgetary Planning

Learning Objectives

When This Book Meets Its Budget, Does It Meet Its Budget, Quite?

When a company's budget is not met, the company's management is faced with a difficult decision. Should the company's budget be revised, or should the company's management be held responsible for the budget's failure?

There are several factors that can affect a company's budget. These factors include changes in the company's operating environment, changes in the company's management, and changes in the company's accounting system.

When a company's budget is not met, the company's management should first determine the reasons for the budget's failure. If the budget's failure is due to changes in the company's operating environment, the company's management should revise the budget. If the budget's failure is due to changes in the company's management, the company's management should be held responsible for the budget's failure.
