

CASE STUDIES

There are a great many ways of writing a case study, so starting one can be frustrating just figuring out what format to use.

For our case studies, the focus is on how in-mold labeling or in-mold decorating solved a technical or business problem in the packaging or durable products industry. There is no requirement to divulge proprietary information but do consider that your case study may be read by a potential customer. A well written case study is an excellent opportunity to show prospective customers that your company has mastered IML/IMD and can deliver cost effective results for them.

Ideally your case study should not be a long winded hard sell. It should be two or three pages and 500 – 900 words, although some tend to run longer. Use graphics to illustrate your information but don't go overboard.

IMDA has developed a final format that shows off our case studies to best advantage.

How to Structure Your Case Study

The typical case study has four parts:

1. Situation, Background or Introduction – This is the opening section that describes the reason for the case study, including the business or product line, product usage, current decoration method and market position. Here is where you set the stage for the parts to come next.
2. Problem – This section states the main problem which needs to be resolved, such as failure of the current decorating method, inadequate service life, excessive costs, etc. Previous attempts at solution that failed can also be addressed here.
3. Solution – This is the heart of the document. It describes the solution in detail, how IML or IMD solved the problem, what changes were made to the manufacturing process, the impact on the cost and end use of the product, methodologies and other factors that contributed to the overall deployment. Some case studies include sidebars, charts and graphs to illustrate key points.
4. Evaluation – In this section recap the main benefits of the solution and the impact on the product's value and function.

reasons of concerns for efficiency Or is it due to external pressures such as competitor pressure that an organization adopts an information system And how does the adoption take place Is it a linear process or is the process one of conflicts Does a specific person govern this process or do we have multiple parties involved What happens if these conflicts occur among those involved How does the organization move on and achieve a successful information system adoption By investigating two organizations one international academic journal and one South American manufacturing company this thesis aims to investigate the whys and hows of information system adoption and aims to contribute to the discourse on information system adoptions in small organizations an often underrepresented segment in information system adoption literature By adopting different theoretical lenses throughout the five research papers included this body of work suggests that even when seemingly simple information system adoptions can become rather complex The cases reveal that the role of information systems and issues related to information system adoptions are often not well thought out in the early days of the organization The actors understandings of adoption and consequences mature and the information systems become more intertwined Common use of stakeholder theory introduces general stakeholders and their interaction with the focal organization The cases reveal that the adoption process involves multiple actors even within what would initially appear as a stakeholder and that those actors can be in conflict with each other These conflicts often lead to negotiations and the cases reveal that these negotiations are opportunities of learning the actors engage with the information system and with each other gaining new knowledge about the issues at hand The dissertation argues that there are various social worlds in information system adoptions and various factors ranging from organizational structure to social norms that often affect why and how the organization undergoes an adoption process The multiple power relations and divergent interests of stakeholders in these adoption processes and how information systems affect other parts of the organization reinforce the need for a well thought out flexible and reflexive approach to information system adoptions

Rethinking the Case Study in International Business and Management Research Rebecca Marschan-Piekkari, Catherine Welch, 2011-01-01 This important and original book places the case study in international business research in its historical context critically evaluates current case study practices in the field and proposes a more pluralistic future for case research within international business and international management research While the case study is the most popular qualitative research strategy in the field only a narrow selection of possible approaches is currently used IB and IM researchers typically rely on a case study approach that could be characterized as qualitative positivism The editors and contributors look beyond this disciplinary convention and encourage greater pluralism in IB and IM case research Their key argument is that increased awareness of prevailing disciplinary conventions and their limitations increases the potential for methodological innovation and versatility in case research The contributions provide critical novel and innovative perspectives on the case study in IB and IM research The book offers inspiration to case authors and an authoritative methodological reference for those publishing and reviewing case research It will also be highly regarded by postgraduate and doctoral students in IB and IM as well as both qualitative and quantitative researchers in the field
